Central Park - The Park That Hides The City: Fall | Winter

Price Catalog

"Here is the ideal I propose for the architecture of the machine age...for how an ideal American architecture should develop in the image of trees" Frank Lloyd Wright

We capture over a thousand single photographs of the trees and landmarks in Central Park and assembled digital art work comprised of layered individual photographs.

We reduced and increased the tones and colors to illuminate better the fractal geometry and patterning found in nature. In this way, we seek to illustrate how nature has chosen this structure and form, not only for all living creatures and plants, but for all the elements and phenomena. From crystals and lightning, rivers and mountains, to blood vessels, the nervous system and even our lungs –all share this fundamental geometry, connecting us to trees and to nature. It is only now that we begin to see how we can direct the power of our imagination, creativity and ingenuity to work with our environment, to find the balance between nature and technology. The cities of the future will no longer look disconnected from nature as it was in the beginning of the industrial revolution, but will draw from the wisdom of nature, connecting nature to technology. In the future world we envision there will no longer be a division between the parks and the cities, as all will integrate into the natural surroundings.
